13	Purpose/aim/objective and outcome of the event
	Objectives: - To develop understanding of research methodology and research design. - To enable students to identify and define a research problem systematically. - To enhance skills in data collection, data analysis, and interpretation. - To develop report writing skills as per academic standards. - To promote critical thinking and analytical ability. - To encourage use of statistical tools and referencing styles (APA/MLA). - To inculcate ethical practices in research. Outcome: - Formulate a clear research problem and objectives. - Design appropriate research methodology (sampling, tools, hypothesis). - Collect and analyze primary/secondary data effectively. - Interpret findings logically and draw meaningful conclusions.

	▪ Prepare a structured research report with bibliography and references. ▪ Develop presentation and academic communication skills. ▪ Apply research knowledge in higher studies and professional work.
14	Complete Activity Report (Description) The Department organized the activity on Drafting of Research Project and On-the-Job Training to enhance students' academic and practical competencies. The activity aimed to develop research aptitude, analytical thinking, and industry exposure in accordance with NEP guidelines promoting experiential learning. Under the Research Project component, students were guided through the process of selecting a research topic, framing objectives, preparing research design, collecting primary and secondary data, analyzing data using basic statistical tools, and drafting a structured research report. Orientation sessions were conducted to explain research methodology, report writing format, and referencing styles. Students presented their findings through viva and presentations. Through this activity, students developed the ability to identify research problems, collect and interpret data, draw meaningful conclusions, and prepare systematic academic reports. Their analytical skills, presentation skills, and confidence improved significantly. Under the On-the-Job Training (OJT) component, students were placed in banks, CA firms, business enterprises, and service organizations to gain practical exposure. They performed tasks such as assisting in accounting work, documentation, data entry, audit support, customer handling, and administrative activities. The OJT provided real-time understanding of organizational structure, work culture, and professional ethics. As an outcome, students were able to apply theoretical knowledge in practical situations, develop communication and teamwork skills, understand workplace responsibilities, and enhance employability skills. The activity successfully bridged the gap between classroom learning and industry requirements. Overall, the Research Project and OJT activity contributed to holistic development of students by strengthening both academic research skills and practical industry readiness.
